A Message From Your Environmental Conservation Committee

Wildfire Risk Prevention and Mitigation

Most of us know instinctively fire is dangerous and so we endeavor to practice fire safety to protect our families, homes, and property. However, fires can occur when safety precautions are relaxed, ignored, or forgotten. If small fires are extinguished quickly, damage is minimized but if not, there is the risk of fire spreading with disastrous results.

This situation is especially precarious when uncontained fires occur outdoors, resulting in wildfires. These fires are particularly hard to control and extinguish resulting in major property damage to communities and loss of life. So, what can we as individual homeowners do to minimize the risk of wildfires? I'm glad you asked!

The National Interagency Fire Center in Boise, ID has compiled many fire resources from state and local governments across the heavily forested western mountain region of the US. Generally, wildfire risk mitigation strategies fall into two categories: fire risk awareness and home and property protection. Next week's message will address what homeowners can do to protect our properties. In this message, I will leave you with two thoughts to consider when you and your families are in our natural recreational areas. When camping, do not leave your cooking fire unattended (even for short periods) and make sure it is completely extinguished when done. Secondly, to prevent igniting dry vegetation, avoid driving over and/or parking on it. Smokey Bear and your neighbors will thank you.
